

Waterloo Wellington Grief, Mental Health and Addiction Services for Healthcare Workers

We want to be there for YOU

Reach out and let us take care of you!

We are so grateful for you and the work you are doing to take care of others. Everyone is being impacted by this pandemic and being on the frontlines means taking on so much more. We hope this quick reference sheet will make it easier for you to connect with us.

Are you experiencing sadness or grief during these stressful times of COVID-19?
Is someone you care about dying, or has someone recently died?

Grief and loss looks and feels different to each person. It can affect your emotions, thoughts, behaviors, and physical body in many ways.

Emotions: you may feel sadness, anger, guilt, shock, numbness, fatigue among many other feelings

Thoughts: you might carry a sense of disbelief, find yourself being forgetful or experiencing intrusive thoughts

Behaviors: you may find yourself withdrawing, crying, becoming restless or experiencing changes in how you sleep or eat

Body: you may sense a hollowness in your stomach or a tightness in your chest or throat as examples

Although you continue to show up for others every day, coping with the anxiety, stress, isolation, exhaustion and fear can start to wear away at your own wellbeing.

Here are a few things for you to watch out for:

- Wanting to withdraw or isolate
- Changes in eating, sleeping
- Difficulty concentrating
- Increased use of drugs/ alcohol or gambling, shopping
- Feeling overwhelmed, alone, frightened and / or confused
- Fear, anxiety, panic attacks
- Belief that there is no hope
- Having thoughts of suicide
